

LINER RECYCLING PROGRAM

Creating a greater circular economy for labels – starting with label release liners in your backyard.

Once a label is removed, release liner plays no further role in the process and is typically discarded into the trash. Choosing and supporting release liner recycling may decrease your monthly trash cost while helping to divert material from landfills. The ability to recycle paper-based release liners, either as a dedicated recycling stream by itself or with your general paper recycling processes, depends on several factors, including volume, type, location, and logistics.

As part of CELAB's new release liner program, we have partnered with select wastepaper dealers in the Chicago area who are experienced and welcome recovered release liner in their recycling stream. CELAB is actively working with the businesses listed below to support and promote your liner recycling effort.

INTRODUCING CELAB

Around the world and across the supply chain, CELAB offers solutions for a more sustainable label industry.

WHO ARE WE?

CELAB: Toward a Circular Economy for Labels is a global consortium of around 50 companies in the pressure-sensitive label industry founded in 2020 to create a sustainable labeling industry by increasing access to matrix and liner recycling. CELAB's mission is to create greater circularity for its products by enhancing and promoting release liner recycling around the world.

WHAT DO WE DO?

We are working with PSA manufacturers, converters, and other industry members to provide the end user with resources and information about how their release liner can be recycled for use in new paper products and label materials, creating a sustainable circular economy for labels.

HOW CAN YOU HELP?

Become a member today! Join your fellow PSA industry leaders to educate and create a more sustainable labeling industry.
